Some key questions

- Should we expect patterns for “private climate finance” to be any different?
- Can public finance actually shift private finance – or will demands for “leveraging” actually shift public finance away from LDCs?
- No public governance of private flows: how well will they overlap with local needs and priorities?
- Broader question: How might broader private flows be undermining communities, increasing vulnerability? Should we be separating “private climate finance” from other private investment activities?
- Might climate vulnerability actually reduce a country’s ability to attract private finance?
